Print & Publishing

What it is, and where the jobs are:
Print and editorial designers in the publishing industry work in graphic design firms, advertising agencies and publishing houses, as well as in-house design departments for companies that are large enough to sustain staff design positions. They design corporate, consumer, and business-to-business communications, packaging, signage systems, cross-media advertising, environmental graphics and experience graphics, and all manner of publications: magazines, books and newspapers.

Web Design & Web Programming

What it is, and where the jobs are:
Web designers and producers work in new media design, or in traditional media with a web presence, such as at a magazine with a web site. Some designers specialize in the technical end of web production, while others work on ‘look and feel.’ HTML5, CSS and JavaScript are used to produce dynamic & animated web sites, and to create web-based games. 3D modeling can be incorporated in animation and augmented reality. Mobile applications and user experience design for apps are increasingly important.

Imaging & Illustration

What it is, and where the jobs are:
Imaging and Illustration creates original images through digital means, sometimes in combination with traditional techniques. Imaging and illustration is an important component in publishing, web, video, multimedia works and fine art. Digital photography expands beyond traditional photographic practices and into new media. Print output, archival and for reproduction is also an important aspect of imaging production.
