Electronic Design & Multimedia Internship Procedures

You may find internships on the web, on the board outside the Art Department Office, or through the Office of Career Services in the NAC building.

Internships can be used for three credits of Independent Study.

Please understand that EDM cannot find internships for every student.

We will post some openings under "Internships" on the board in 119.

On other occasions we will send our best students to interview for internships which require specific skill sets.

Here are the steps you need to take in order to get Independent Study credit for your internship:

1. Locate an internship opportunity.
2. Fill out the Application for Independent Study and Creative Projects (you can get this in the Art Department Office, Room 109).
The application requires a 100-200 word Project Proposal.
3. Bring both forms to Prof. Moderegger in CG132 for approval & signature (ANY full time faculty member can sign as your mentor for the course).
Do not leave the form in the faculty mailbox; you must get the signature in person during office or advising hours, which are posted outside of 109.)
4. If you don't have a mentor, Prof. Moderegger will assign a faculty member from EDM to supervise your internship.
5. Get the Art Dept. Chair's signature on Application.
Make three copies of Application and Project Proposal
(one for Prof. Moderegger, one for the Art Department, one for yourself).
6. See Ms. Kurtz in the Art Office for further registration procedures.
7. To get a grade at the end of your internship:
At the end of your internship, get a letter from your internship supervisor evaluating your performance in detail.
The letter should be sealed in an envelope and signed by the supervisor along the flap. The letter can also be emailed, by your supervisor from his/her work account with a PDF on letterhead attached directly to the faculty advisor.
Bring your letter to the supervising faculty member, who will enter a grade based on this evaluation.

NOTE: It is the student's responsibility to obtain the evaluation from the supervisor, which is required to obtain a grade for the internship.

You may start an internship during a semester and register for it at the beginning of the next semester.

Guidelines for Employers

Thank you for considering our Electronic Design & Multimedia students for your internship.

We receive many requests for our students and we want to make sure that correct and complete information will be posted on our Jobs/ Internships Bulletin Board.

Students will contact you directly. Please understand that we cannot guarantee a response to your request. It is up to the individual student to decide whether the project/job/internship you offer will work into his/her schedule and whether it is the right opportunity based on his/her skills and needs.

Most of our students need money for tuition and living expenses and are therefore more likely to respond if there is a budget for your job or project.

Internships (and sometimes projects, depending on duration) may be done for college credits.

To have your job or internship posted, please fill out ALL fields in the following form.

How to be a Successful Intern

Be reliable. This is the single most important rule! Be on time or early. Don't make any excuses; just BE there. Once you have agreed on a schedule, stick to it, no matter what.

Be positive. Be friendly and upbeat. Show that you are happy for this opportunity. Have a good attitude. Internships are competitive; remember that it is a privilege to be where you are. Having this internship on your resume will be valuable when you begin your job search later on.

Be observant. On your first day, check out what everyone is wearing, and how they are behaving. Try to be aware of what is considered acceptable attire and try to emulate it. It's different from dressing for school; when in a professional environment, you must dress accordingly.

Pay attention to the interaction between department members. Pick up signals that will tell you how to conduct yourself professionally, and you will begin to learn how the creative process works. Ask politely if you may be included in meetings. Remember that you are there only to observe, and you should assume that the proceedings of the meeting are confidential.

Be respectful. Important business is going on. Understand that people are busy and are juggling many tasks. Although every creative environment is different, don't be fooled by appearances. While the atmosphere may seem casual, staffers are responsible for meeting goals and deadlines; the work is very serious even if people seem to be joking around.

Be proactive. Don't wait for someone to tell you what to do. Ask your supervisor if he/she needs anything at all. If not, ask everyone else in the art department. You are not only there to learn, but to help with whatever tasks you are assigned.

Be realistic. Don't expect to do design work right away. You may be asked to do mundane tasks such as copying, faxing, filing or returning artwork until you have shown that you can handle more responsibility and that you can be trusted to follow through with your work.

Be diligent. Complete all assignments on time. Work turned in late, no matter how good, may be of no value. Try to go above and beyond what you are asked to do. Take full responsibility for your work. If your supervisor has to work late, ask whether you are needed before going home.

Be helpful. Offer to go out for snacks or soda; this shows that you are willing to help make staffers' jobs easier with even the smallest of tasks. Remember that simply by being in a professional creative environment and observing how team members interact, you are gaining valuable experience in learning how to conduct yourself in the 'real' world.

Communicate. Don't be shy. Don't wait for your supervisor to ask how you are doing with a task; keep your supervisor informed frequently. Don't be afraid to ask questions; you are there to learn and most members of the department are happy to answer your questions.

If you make a good impression, there is a possibility that you may be offered freelance (paying) work and possibly even a staff position (this happens more often than you think!).

Even if your internship ends and there are no immediate opportunities, if you make a good impression you may be called back when a spot opens up; you will have an inside track because you are a 'known quantity'. And even if that doesn't happen, or if you want to try a different area of graphic design, if you leave a good impression you can ask your supervisor whether you may use him/her as a reference when you are job-hunting.

Having good professional references makes you a stronger job candidate.
